P.B.

The two-day hearing may be the final chance for Julian Assange to prevent his extradition to the United States. If extradited, Assange faces a sentence of up to 175 years in prison for exposing war crimes committed by the United States in the Afghan and Iraq wars.

Julian's supporters have called for a mass protest at the court on the days of the hearing at 8:30am. They welcome all those who support press freedom to join them in London and around the world.

Assange has been in the high-security Belmarsh Prison since his arrest on a US extradition request on 11 April 2019.

The upcoming public hearing will be held before a panel of two judges who will review an earlier High Court decision taken by a single judge on 6 June 2023 which refused Mr Assange permission to appeal.

If Julian's case cannot be reopened, he faces immediate extradition unless the European Court of Human Rights intervenes.
